

Mapping the borough's WW2 Bombsites - Street Photographers

Hackney Museum are looking for volunteers to help support and research content for a new display that identifies and tells the stories bombsites and people affected in WW2.

About This Event

Hackney Museum is looking for volunteers to help research content for a new display that identifies and tells the stories of these bombsites and the people affected. With opportunities for research, transcribing first hand accounts or street photography.

Street photographers will visit locations identified by volunteer researchers and use photographs of bomb damage to capture shots of what bombsite locations across the borough look like today. The images will be used as part of an interactive in the new displays at Hackney Museum.
